CAUSES

Over the past two years, the number of domestic violence cases has increased by 20% due to the war and the population's economic situation. People need a rapid response to the problem and a safe place for temporary shelter.

Low level of inter-agency cooperation between the police, social services, and medical institutions in cases of domestic violence.

Lack of specialized facilities that meet safety and confidentiality requirements for the temporary accommodation of victims.

Insufficient public awareness of the available support mechanisms for cases of domestic violence.

Limited options for temporary shelter for women and children in cases of domestic violence.
